BASKETBALL CALL ISSUED TUESDAY

FOUR LETTERMEN RETURN; SQUAD GIVES PROMISE OF SUCCESSFUL SEASON

Coach Alex J. Nemzek's call for basketball was answered Tuesday by volunteers who will start the long grind of the cage season of 1928 and 1929.

BASKETBALL SCHEDULE

- Dec. 8—Concordia at Concordia. Dec. 15—Concordia, Armory. Dec. 21—A. C. Frosh (practice).

Nemzek has made his call earlier than was anticipated.

New Men to Enroll.

Among the lettermen returning this year are four men who are now in school: Captain "Sy" Bielfeldt, Vic Anderson, George Edwards, and Leland Vinz.

Minnesota, Montana Stars.

Among the new faces on the basketball court Tuesday were: Obert Nelson, guard on the Moorhead High School basketball team that won the Minnesota state championship.

Lyman Davis hails from Frazee, where he has played three years of basketball and has made good account of himself all three years.

Among the men on the squad last year who made considerable progress are: Gordon Grina, fighting forward, who made a good name for himself last year in the games he played.

Squad Promising.

The Ped material at the present time looks short in stature, but smallness does not bother much if there is lots of speed in that smallness.

With the beginning of the new quarter new men should be coming in and it is likely that there will be basketball men in their midst.

VACATION NEXT WEEK

Classes at the College will cease for the fall quarter next Wednesday noon. The Thanksgiving vacation will extend over the week-end to Tuesday morning, when regular classes for the winter quarter will begin at 8:05 a. m.

FULL HOUSE TO GREET KEDROFFS

ALUMNI SENDS TELEGRAM REGARDING CONCERT TOMORROW NIGHT

Tomorrow evening at 8:15 students, faculty, and townspeople will hear the Kedroff quartet in a concert built around Russian folk songs, a concert which promises to be an outstanding music number in the cities this year.

Helen Bergquist, star of the 1926 class play of the College, "Jeanne d'Arc," and soloist with the Chapel Choir of that year, now a student at Northwestern university, sent a telegram to Mrs. Frank Temple, Fargo pianist who has appeared frequently at the College, urging that she hear the Kedroff quartet by all means.

Tickets to this concert in New York City cost $3.30, main floor, while box seats were $19.50. Balcony seats and gallery seats were from $2.75 to $1.10.

Russian songs have an unusual variety, not only in theme, which ranges from love to war and religion, but they vary according to the locality in which they were written.

SOPH PARTY THIS EVENING FEATURE

According to reports from members of the various committees, the Sophomore term party this evening is going to be the "biggest and best" so far this fall.

The faculty and the men of the College have been invited as guests to the party. All told, about three hundred people are included in the group.

Dancing will be the chief form of entertainment this evening. A five-piece orchestra has been secured, so that the "light fantastic" may be tripped to the best of harmony and rhythm.

Holiday Decorations Used.

The decorations are to carry out the Thanksgiving spirit to the last detail. Turkeys, pumpkins, and other things symbolic of Thanksgiving are to be featured in the decorations.

Another touch that will add to the Thanksgiving spirit will be given in the way of the refreshments. Pumpkin pie, without which no Thanksgiving is complete, will be served.

Winter Teachers For Rural Schools Named

The girls who will do their teaching in the affiliated schools during the winter term are: Clearview—Olive Bergeson, Sylvia Flikke, Lucille Frost, and Olive Tukua.

Sunnyside—Myrtle Berg and Evelyn Hermanson. Grover—Esther Mattson and Mamie Johnson. Gunderson—Florence Simmons and Edith Gust.

BANQUET PLANNED FOR GLYNDON SCHOOL PEOPLE

Tomorrow evening at 6 p. m. a banquet will be given at Weld Hall for the school board members and their wives, the superintendent and his wife, and the grade and high school teachers of Glyndon.

A Parents' Visiting Day was held at the Gunderson school last Wednesday. Regular classes were held until three o'clock, when a lunch was served.

ACTIVITIES PLAN TO BE VOTED ON

EXECUTIVE SENATE EVOLVES PLAN TO GOVERN EXTRA-CURRICULAR WORK

The Executive Senate has been working for some time on the task of arranging the extra-curricular load of students. The following is the plan which it has just recently worked out, to be voted upon by the Student Council next Monday at its meeting, 3:40 p. m., in room 23.

PROPOSED PLAN

1. Whereas extra curricular activities exist for the development which the student gets out of them, and whereas certain activities require more time than others, it seems desirable to regulate the distribution of responsibility and consequent distribution of honor and training.

2. It has been evident for several years that one person who becomes prominent in student life for one activity is likely to be chosen for other offices because he is well known and capable. It seems desirable to develop other talent, to make other leaders, to prevent overloading a few students, and to distribute responsibility.

3. It is hoped that the various organizations will see the purpose of this effort and assist in enforcing these regulations. If the regulations are not right, then representatives should appear before the executive senate and student council to demand a change.

Major Group of Offices (1).

4. No student shall hold more than one of the following offices at any one time:

- President of Student Council. Editor of The MISTIC. Business Manager of The MISTIC. Editor of Praeceptor. Business Manager of Praeceptor. President of Sophomore Class. President of Freshman Class. President of Junior Class. President of Senior Class. President of W. A. L. President of Art Club. President of Owls. President of Gamma Nu. President of Pi Mu Phi. President of Kappa Pi. President of Delta Sigma. President of Athletic Board. President of Lambda Phi Sigma. President of Y. M. C. A. President of Y. W. C. A.

5. A student may be elected to a second office when already an officer in another, but he must then resign one office so that he does not keep more than one of the above offices. This does not forbid a student making a choice of offices if he has the opportunity.

INGERSOLL NAMED '28 GRID CAPTAIN

TEAM IS HONORED AT BANQUET TUESDAY; 1928 SEASON PROVES SUCCESS

(By Allen Erickson)

John Ingersoll of Moorhead was elected football captain of the 1929 Ped team at the annual banquet given to the players and a few guests by the men of the faculty Tuesday evening in Weld Hall.

The banquet marked the culmination of one of the most successful seasons the College has ever had, the team taking the Interstate Conference championship, tying St. Cloud, and losing only to Concordia.

Ceremonial Held For Five by Lambda Phi

At the ceremonial held last Saturday evening, November 17, at the Fargo Commercial Club rooms, Hazel Erickson, Ella Evenson, Florence Gregerson, Alma Peterson, and Petra Rekkedal were formally received into the honorary educational fraternity, Lambda Phi Sigma.

The place cards were suggestive of Book Week. Maybe there are a number of those who are unaware of the fact that President MacLean is the author of a compilation entitled, "The One Hundred Best Scotch Jokes"; that Dr. Archer has edited a book called, "How I Caught a Jackrabbit With My Camera"; and that Mr. Sande has entered the literary circles with his work, "Why An Air Route Should Be Established from M. S. T. C. to the Affiliated Schools."

BAND CONCERT WILL BE GIVEN AFTER VACATION

The chapel assembly for the first Friday after Thanksgiving vacation, December 7, is to be a concert by the Band. "New and stirring marches, a lively overture, a trombone novelty, cornet and trombone solos, and a feature by the Male Octette are to make up the program," according to the announcement given The MISTIC.

L., complete pictures of Homecoming, with the parade, the crowd, the Queen, the College Band, the Peds in action, various activities of the rural affiliated schools, the Y. M. and Y. W., and many other features of college life.

Student Sees It Three Times.

A prominent M. S. T. C. coed, who has seen "The Kickoff" three times, when asked whether she would see it again, said she certainly would be there.

Characterized as a dramatic tale of life at college—its work, its fun, its hazards and its rewards, "The Kickoff" takes a country lad from Hicksville and in the short span which makes up a college life-time turns him out the best scholar, by far, and away the best dancer, the most sought-after man socially in all the school, and as for football—well, they still talk about his great run which—well, come and see the rest.

THE STUDENT LOAD

It is agreed upon by authorities that there is a limit to the amount of work that any one individual can do and do well.

In the routine of everyday life there are checks of many descriptions which prevent the individual from attempting too much.

In our own campus life we find many good examples of this failure, especially in extra-curricular activities.

In some colleges the "point system" is used; in others, the number of activities are limited and these activities put on a competitive basis.

It would also serve to make a greater division of student participation; it would prevent one student from getting more honors than he really deserves.

LOYAL FRIENDS

We come rushing madly down the stairs. "Oh, where is he?" we gasp. And there he is, smiling serenely at us, broom in hand.

WHO SAID CHIVALRY WAS DEAD?

It was a small red buglike thing that stood silent outside of the main entrance of this institution.

What does one do in a situation like this? The men sat motionless, the buglike red thing stood still.

OPEN COLUMN

KEEP LIBRARY OPEN EVENINGS

Library facilities are good, but they could be better! How? Why, just think, wouldn't it be wonderful if we could study in the library in the evening until about ten o'clock?

How can a girl in the dormitory really study when she hears a knock on her door every five or ten minutes? She says, "Come!" One or two will come prancing in with questions to this effect: "What do we have for Kid Lit. tomorrow?"

To maintain your social standing with these college coeds one cannot shout "Get out!" but say sweetly, "Oh, yes, didn't you adore that?"

of the possibilities of getting exactly the right books at the right time. Someone came to me last night and ejaculated, "Oh, banana oil! I took Volume I out of the library instead of Volume II! I wish the library were open now."

Another good feature is the possibilities for reading the wealth of material that can be found on the numerous shelves. During the day, we cannot sit quietly uninterrupted and obtain as much enjoyment as we would like from our library.

Now, really, wouldn't you like the library to be open in the evenings? —I. H.

ATHLETICS FOR WOMEN

The old war is on again! About this time every year the question of women's sports very logically come to the foreground. With the organization of women's sports for the year the "promoters" of the athletics for women are confronted with the problem of the extent to which college women should participate in inter-collegiate athletics. Immediately the word "inter-collegiate" is associated with "women's sports", the exponents of all that is "fitting and proper" rush up with much protest.

They tell us that women will ruin their health, and thus spoil their ultimate aim in life—motherhood. They tell us that the inter-collegiate competition in boys' athletics would make any attempt on the part of the women to enter the field of inter-collegiate contests seem like diluted milk in comparison to that of the men.

Dear old wet blankets, how provincial you are! Don't you know that sex is not the biggest factor in athletics? The individual is stressed. Train a group of nearly physically perfect women in the manner that the men are trained and you could not, if you tried, impair their health.

Why should the spectacle of speedy, efficient, young women in action be of less attraction than the men? None. It is doubtless because the protector has never seen such a bit of play.

As for the question of expenses, the expenses could be defrayed in much the same manner as those of the men.

No, I fear that there is too much small talk with little basis in facts. Give the women the one big opportunity and watch them fly into real action.

THE PED PEPYS

Up betimes and to the window, where I gazed upon a bleak, chill dawn. After completing my morning's toilet, I put Senor Ireland's razor back in the case and also returned Monsieur Ingersoll's tooth paste to its usual resting place.

Off to my daily labours, where I became so engrossed in the minute details of my arduous duties that I soon lost all conception of time. Indeed, I was so deeply imbued with the spirit of industry that I failed to hear the noon-hour bell and the result was that before I discovered the time it was 37 seconds past noon.

The afternoon was spent by myself and a fellow worker in a heated discussion on the much mooted question, "Advantages of Working by the Hour." After spending the entire afternoon in this way I discovered that he believed as I did, so I considered the time wasted, inasmuch as I got nothing to pay for my trouble.

In the evening I attended the Owl dance after securing as a partner an unsuspecting girl who didn't know me. However, she was game and insisted that she had had a delightful time, even though she had danced with Ernie Gates. It being rather late I took myself off to the room and so to bed.

GIANTS IN THE EARTH
(By O. E. Rolvaag)

"Giants in the Earth," a saga of the prairie, is a heroic tale of Norwegian settlers on the plains of South Dakota in which runs a double conflict—the first, between man and earth; the second, between man and wife.

In the first, Per Hansa glorified; he had come for his, to wrest fruit from the earth, to found homes on the soil. The second task took the heart out of him. Because of his deep love for his wife, Beret's hatred of the new hard life and her longing for the remembered comforts of Norway were a sore trial to Per Hansa. He persevered, hoping that she would learn to feel as he did, but she could not change. Religion, her chief comfort, became gradually an obsession and coupled with the community's feeling of dependence on Per, it induced at last the tragic scene with which the story closes.

"It is a moving narrative of pioneer hardship and heroism told with such obvious veracity that it makes almost all other tales of the western frontier seem cheap." Read it to verify this challenge.

"The background of the boundless prairie with its mysterious distances and its capacity for evil, is painted with alternating beauty and grimness."

The book contains three great descriptions: the storm of locusts, the blizzard, and the coming of the lone pioneer whose wife has gone mad with grief. It is worth reading for these moments alone.

The tale is told with memorable simplicity and vigor. While there is no woven plot, the story mounts steadily in interest. One catches from the harvest incidents, joy of earth love and mastery; from the winter scenes, gloom and monotony.

Various comments indorse the statement, "'Giants in the Earth' will give a true picture of a great chapter in American history."

The reader wonders at the extraordinary satisfaction felt after reading this tragedy. It may be said that this work has for maturity that interest which "The Swiss Family Robinson" has for childhood.

Per's love for his fellow men, both in and out of his household, causes his character and personality to shine out when contrasted with tyranny and selfishness of Caleb Gore, pictured in "Wild Geese."

While the book was written for the people of Norway, proper, it has been taken up with a lively interest in America. It is a distinct contribution to the literature of the two countries.

A SCHOOL MASTER OF THE GREAT CITY
(By Angelo Patri)

Frequently students are burdened even at the thought of having to read a treatise on pedagogy or child study. Books on the modern trend in education do not always have a savor such that it tempts the average student to seek them voluntarily. There are, however, books on these particular subjects different enough from the average to warrant the interest and attention of any individual who is a prospective teacher.

Please do not misconstrue my purpose in suggesting this rather unique type of book. I do not mean that pedagogy, psychology and management should be sugar coated so as to aid in swallowing the "bitter things," but rather that books be furnished which are sufficiently different from the ordinary formal type to stimulate spontaneous interest.

Angelo Patri, a teacher in New York City, has given us just such a book. He amalgamates actual experiences with sound pedagogy. In a simple and sincere, but interesting manner, he relates his experiences as a school master in the Great City. His teaching career there dates back to the time when the word "methods" became popular on tongues of the educational world. A little later, school leaders were swayed by the science of education and its principles. Angelo Patri carries the reader through several of the various periods or steps in educational progress. At the same time he silhouettes himself and his school against each passing change.

Angelo Patri was born in Italy. At an early age he came with his father to America. In New York City he made his first impression of our country—his point of view, an Italian settlement district. His experiences as a child, as a youth, and as a teacher, in the Great City have given him a beautiful philosophy as well as a keen understanding of childhood. Every year has brought him a wider horizon—each difficult experience, a more tender sympathy toward a troublesome child or an anxious teacher.

Were I to express my opinion of his

Mrs. Gudrun Olson sat alone—her daughter at business college would not be home until Saturday—listening to the radio from the other room. Just now this device was giving to the palpitating world its current market prices. She listened to it as she washed the few supper dishes and wondered if Haakon, her husband, would return soon. Above all else she feared loneliness, so she kept her ears on the radio simply for the pleasure of hearing a human voice.

Haakon! What a steady stodgy man he was. More like a brother or a cousin than a husband he seemed to her. She had married him at Fargo twenty years ago when Ted had been sent to prison for taking his employer's money. They had been engaged but this of course had been broken off when the scandal became a public tid-bit. Piqued, she had married Haakon Olson and had moved out to his farm eighteen miles north of town.

What a handsome youth Ted had been. Was he the same as he had been then, with a devil-may-care light in his eyes as he danced? With his dark curls all tumbling down over his flashing eyes? To her he represented her lost youth, her palace of memories, the whole past that might have been.

He had married Liz Connolly when he was paroled for good behavior, and, so far as she knew, they had been getting along all right. But, oh, for a sight of him!

She was brought back to her present world by a new voice from the broadcasting station—"This is Sheriff Heffy speaking. I wish to make the following announcement: A man by the name of Theodore Sloane murdered his wife at their residence in Fargo. He is still at large. The following is his description: height, five feet eleven inches, dark hair, blue eyes, scar on his left ear, weight about 160 pounds. Handsome. He was dressed in a dark blue suit, and was wearing a light brown hat. He was last seen a mile north of Fargo this morning, and it is believed that he is heading for Canada. Should he be seen please notify this station or my office at Fargo."

Scarcely believing her ears, Gudrun stood aghast. Out of the past his name came to her and again it was linked with crime.

Even as these thoughts raced through her mind, through the kitchen window she saw a man dart furtively from the machine shed to the barn. She knew it was Ted.

Without thinking, she opened the door and stepped out into the yard. Her shoes crunched on the gravel and corn spread for the chickens, and as she approached to within a few feet of the barn, he peered around the corner and without any show of surprise, said, "Well, Gudrun, are you going to turn me over?"

Calm and collected as he had always been. He hadn't changed a bit save where the reckless light had been in his eyes, there now was a bitter hardened glow.

The only reply that she could think of was, "Oh, Ted, why did you do it?"

Impatiently, he replied, "She nagged me. She knew that I never cared for anyone but you and she determined to have her revenge. She kept it up for fifteen years, and then I couldn't stand it any longer, so I choked her. God, I couldn't stand it any longer."

Attentive to his wants as she had always been to Haakon's, she said, "Hungry, Ted?"

"I'm almost starved. Couldn't you get me something? I know you must despise me, but if I can gather a little strength I'll make Canada all right and I won't bother you any more."

Despise! How the word rankled in her mind. "All right, Ted. There's no one home with me, but you had better stay out here in case Haakon should come home."

Returning to the house she wondered what it was all about. Haakon—Ted—Liz—Sheriff—murder—food—oh, it was too much bother to even think—better put the coffee on.

She had forgotten to turn off the radio and now it ground out a modern dance tune. It seemed almost sacrilegious to her, and, with an exclamation, she turned it off. Mechanically she put the pot on the range and added some fresh wood.

Life seemed to have something new book, "A School Master of the Great City," I should say just what I heard a certain teacher say last spring, after she had put in several months of hard struggles with school children: "I've kept Patri's 'School Master of the Great City' on my desk for several weeks in order to have a constant reminder that after all a child is a human being."

The Tip Off

for her. If she could only get him safely into Canada! No more would she wonder where he was and what he was doing, for, by some paradox, she knew he would be safe.

She set out to make some sandwiches. Radishes and lettuce. A bit of sauce and some meat.

He'd need money. Let's see, how much was there in that china pot? It represented a month's work on her chickens, but Ted could have it all and more if she had it. Eighteen dollars and eighty-seven cents. Not much, but it would help some. Maybe there was some in Haakon's dresser—but what were those voices in the barn yard?

Hurrying to the door, she saw Haakon and the sheriff drag Ted out from the barn. Rushing to her, his blond hair all tousled, her husband inquired, "Are you all right, Gudrun? This guy is wanted for murder and I just met the sheriff. Somebody phoned up and tipped him off. Why, what's the matter with you, Gudrun? Are you sick?"

Sick!

STUDENT VERSE

PHILOSOPHICAL

The moon is full; the winds beat loud as I walk 'neath the stars. The leaves seem to ripple arboreal applause while I roam through the night. Oh, to feel the chill of dark and to while away the hours visiting the world! Night makes the ugly wonderful and tonight I must have only the beautiful. For I am in quest of life and before dawn I must know the truth.

I ponder as I tramp a gathered field, "Why must man betray his fellow man, and why is all this a hurry and flurry? What is to happen to those bewildered souls who do not care to make up their minds but rather, far, would seek only life? Why am I here—from whence did I come? Where is peace in this world of war? Where shall I finally wend my way?"

The stars twinkle a jovial grin to me from afar. The moon fairly laughs aloud. The owl squawks a raucous guffaw as it beats past—even the hare in its talons forgets his hurt as he painfully chuckles to me. The withered leaves rasp a rattly aged chuckle while the field mouse brings his tiny progeny to give them a laugh. The wind tells the rousing joke to the corn stalks, standing like slender crippled soldiers in a frozen field.

"My son 'tis indeed a cause for mirth. Why should you trouble your head on such problems which have been the bane of learned men? I doubt if they'll ever be solved. Why you're too young to be so philosophical. Come, forget it all in the charm of youth. Dance and be merry, write, perhaps, some wretched poesy and

BALDWIN GIVES AVIATION TALK

At Wednesday morning's chapel assembly Murray Baldwin, president of the Fargo Aeronautics Club, gave an informal discussion of the subject of aviation.

Mr. Baldwin gave a brief history of the development of aeroplanes from the simple machine built by the Wright brothers, whose first flight was a distance of 45 feet, to the present-day machines which can encircle the globe in a few hours.

After the war, new fields of commercial aviation opened up, but in spite of the fact that aviation has advanced rapidly in the intervening years between the war and the present time, there are still several major problems to be solved, such as the matter of correctly-constructed landing fields and the dangers involved in flying amid a heavy fog, which makes it difficult for the pilot to determine his exact altitude above the earth. With the solution of these problems the outlook upon the future of aviation looks promising.

Activities Plan

6. This regulation represents only a minimum requirement. It is desirable that organizations should go even farther in the distribution of responsibility. A student who has a major office listed above should not accept many other positions either in the form of minor offices or on program committees.

7. Each time officers are chosen, a list of the same should be reported at once to the President of the Student Council. An up-to-date list of all officers will be kept posted to guide other organizations in the choice of officers.

Group II.

8. The following are a list of positions requiring special talent. Because special talent is required, it seems difficult to place these groups on the restricted list as given above even if they do take much time. Persons may hold office in one of the above groups and still retain membership in one or more of the following, though it is urged that where students are active members of these special organizations they shall not assume responsibilities as leaders in the major offices and in but few minor offices.

- (1) Athletic teams.
- (2) Band.
- (3) Chapel Choir.
- (4) Glee Clubs.
- (5) Quartettes.
- (6) Yell leader.
- (7) Orchestra.
- (8) Dramatics.
- (9) Debate team.

9. This does not definitely restrict except for the major offices. However, it is hoped that the suggestions with reference to offices other than the major group will be carried out by organizations and individuals.

10. These regulations which have their origin in the Executive Senate will become effective if passed by a majority vote of the student council. The council will meet in room 23 next Monday at 3:40. Organizations will kindly instruct delegates how to vote.

TRAINING SCHOOL BAND IS ORGANIZED WITH 15

A band numbering to date fifteen pieces has been organized in the Training School by Mr. Christensen, who will have general supervision of the organization. Students are now equipped with instruments, and practice will begin with the opening of the winter term.

men, who sponsored a bountiful repast. After the tables had been cleared speeches were in order, with Mr. Sande acting as toastmaster.

Coach Nemzek talked of the good showing made by the team throughout the season and the substantial increase in the male enrollment over last year. He said that the best advertising for the school can be done by the football athletes, who when they get placed in communities, can show by their example what the State Teachers College has done for them.

Two Captains Respond.

The next man to air his ideas was Ralph Smith, captain of this year's squad. He pointed out that each year the team should be just a little better, profiting by the last year's mistakes. He also compared the work on the gridiron with contacts in life itself, there being a direct correlation between the two. The captain-elect, John Ingersoll, declared that the team of '29 would uphold the glory of M. S. T. C. as no other team has done. President MacLean gave a fine talk on the significance of football in school life, having as his subject, "Punting High and Hitting Low."

Errington Main Speaker.

Rev. Errington of the Congregational Church told how he had watched the football activities of M. S. T. C. grow and develop in the years that he has been in Moorhead. His topic was "Stars, Stellers, and Statues," and his talk was both entertaining and inspiring. Coach Hanna of the Moorhead High School, O. M. Martinson, donor of the Martinson trophy, and Dr. O. J. Hagen, resident director of the College, also gave short talks. The banquet will be remembered by those present as a delightful event in the school year.

Year Is Summarized.

In looking over the record of the Moorhead Teachers football squad this year it is evident that the fellows started out much stronger than they finished up. The first game played at Fergus Falls September 29 against Park Region College resulted in an orgy of passing and line play that left Park Region dazed and beaten by the overwhelming score of 92 to 0. The next game with Valley City, October 6, ended happily for the Peds, 18 to 7. On October 19, St. Cloud came here and held the Crimson to a scoreless tie. The Peds took the "Jimmies" into camp 12-6 on October 27. November 3, which was also the Homecoming day, stands out as the only defeat of the year for the Peds. Concordia downed them 24 to 0. The fighting Peds wound up the season by defeating the Wahpeton Wildcats 7 to 0 at that place November 10. On reviewing the record it is difficult to discern any glaring weaknesses in the general football technique this year. When they played well, the whole team starred; when they faltered, the whole team slumped. There was a marked absence of individual brilliance, which might be looked upon as a happy sign of genuine co-ordination, the ultimate aim of football training.

Gates Submits His All-Conference Team

(By E. Rr Gates)

Picking a mythical team in the I. A. C. is a very difficult problem, as no one person saw all teams in action. At any time, the best player might have been playing poorly, and others doing their best; hence it is a difficult task to pick an all-conference team.

At a conference meeting a few days ago, the coaches of the various teams agreed to select a list of honorable mention and from this one gets a little idea of some of the other players. In two cases I have chosen men whom I did not see in action, and for this particular choice there is a definite reason. Kurth was the only mention for center in the coaches' choice for honorable mention; therefore we must accept that player as the logical man for that position. Also in the case of Loeden from Minot, there were only two honorable mentions for ends and he, being one of them, deserves a place on this eleven.

Position	Player	School
Center	Kurth	Minot
Right Guard	Long	Jamestown
Right Tackle	Fiola	Valley City
Right End	Loeden	Minot
Quarterback	Edwards	Moorhead
Right Half	Gussner	Jamestown
Fullback	Eckel	Valley City
