

LIVINGSTON C. LORD LIBRARY

Livingston C. Lord, a native of Connecticut, was the superintendent of schools in St. Peter, Minnesota when he was hired to be the first president of the Moorhead Normal Schools in 1888. During his eleven-year tenure, Lord firmly established the school as a premier institution for teacher training. He left the college in 1899 to become president of another institution in Illinois. He died in Illinois in 1933.

Lord's command of American and English literature was such that the American Scholar noted that he found in reading the "one thing in the world of value, the active soul." It was therefore natural to name the library in his honor.

Architect: Magney, Tussler and Setter, Minneapolis.
Building completed: 1961, additions in 1971, 1987.

Livingston C. Lord